* _Photoshop Elements_ offers most of the same tools as Photoshop (but not access to the different color channels), yet it's much more affordable (see the book's companion website, When I first got started with digital photography, I had been using Adobe Photoshop, but once I got over my initial agita, I realized that the program's functions and features were overwhelming. Therefore, I searched for another product that was less intimidating, yet still capable of working with my digital images. That product is Adobe Photoshop Elements. In addition to the same basic image-editing tools that I was accustomed to, Photoshop Elements is a very versatile program. You can use it as an all-in-one photo-editing program — and it includes tools for adjusting colors, retouching skin, and even creating and printing greeting cards. You can download Creative Suite software at www.adobe.com. In this part, I help you get up to speed on Photoshop, and I provide you with the tools you need to accomplish the majority of your image-editing tasks. The remainder of this book covers many aspects of retouching and image editing. You'll find out how to open and save files, which are just as important as the software itself. You'll learn how to import and export images. I also lead you through the process of labeling a catalog file with keywords and access codes (for cataloging images). Finally, I teach you how to take a single image and create and print a multi-image booklet, envelopes, and greeting cards. ## Eye-Opening Tools in Photoshop Photoshop is the most popular commercial photo-editing software on the market, yet it's also the tool for serious hobbyists who want to go beyond the basics. For example, you can crop out unwanted objects, straighten your pictures, and then stitch together multiple layers into a high-quality composite image. You can also print high-resolution images on the largest and most expensive printers on the market. However, a major complaint of Photoshop users is that the program is not easy to navigate and that the commands are mostly located in submenus in the Creative Suite (programs for design, drawing, and web publishing; see the following chapter for more info). If you're not using all the tools, or if you just can't remember how to access them, don't worry: You

I'm a graphic designer with an MA, and a few years of working experience. I love to work with branding, publication design, graphics and some web design. I love doing the little details, like the spacing of the fonts, logos, branding fonts and paper. I love to help clients bring their vision to life, and give them ideas and design that will help them be successful. I'm a doer and a perfectionist, and I'm comfortable with both details and big picture. My work is very important to me. Whether it's researching the meaning of the word a client is using, or keeping in mind while designing a logo or packaging. I pride myself on taking on the client and making sure that their end result is spectacular. I'm very detail oriented, so I would love to work with companies that are willing to trust my skills. I work best in teams with others with a good understanding of what the client wants and what they're trying to accomplish. I'm very reasonable, with a sense of humor and fun. I often have a smile on my face, even if I'm frustrated with a client. I enjoy working with others.[Risk factors in acute ischaemic heart diseases in elderly patients]. A total of 325 elderly patients (age over 65 years) were included in this study. Out of a total of 2,121 chest pain cases (mean age 67.5 +/- 6.0 years) with suspected acute coronary syndrome (ACS), the incidence of ACS was 32.3% (25.2% in men and 37.1% in women). We noted a higher frequency of patients presenting with atypical symptoms of ACS in women, compared with men. After exclusion of patients presenting with ACS before admission and of those with prior chest pain or myocardial infarction, we identified 16% of false-positive cases (100% in women and 46.5% in men). The over-all incidence of ACS was 10.5% (men 9.8% and women 10.6%). The data suggest that the incidence of ACS is particularly elevated in women over 65 years. There was no other significant risk factor associated with ACS in our patient population.The present invention relates to endoscopic surgery. [Appropriateness of medication prescription for respiratory diseases]. Although clinical practice guidelines for the treatment of respiratory diseases have been published in Spain for many years, the knowledge of the appropriateness of these treatments is poor. The aim of this study was to assess the prescription of respiratory treatments in different centers within the autonomous community of Cantabria, Spain. The appropriateness of prescriptions was assessed using a generic appropriateness scoring system. The study comprised the respiratory treatments prescribed in a period of 12 months in different center within the Autonomous Community of Cantabria, Spain. The treatment in each patient was registered from May 2004 to May 2005. The mean age of the patients was 64 years. The results showed that the appropriateness of the prescribed treatments was greater than 70% in general and was especially high in chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (89%). The mean number of treatments in each patient was 3.5. Prescription of respiratory medications is generally appropriate. However, the prescriptions in patients older than 70 years should be reassessed, considering the scarce improvement of the prognosis in this age group, and the possible adverse effects of certain treatments.Q: How to copy a hash to a local variable in Perl? How do I copy a hash reference to a local variable in Perl? I have an array of hashes: my @h = ({ key => "a1", value => "abcd1234" }, { key => "a2", value => "defge4567" },); In the context of the code, the key is the job name, and the value is the contents of a file under the server's working directory. I use the values to compare two files for differences, comparing the differences is critical to being correct, so I would like to copy the current contents of the hashes to local variables, possibly to be then use to compare the contents. How to do that? A: You have the elements of the list in @h. The 'keys' of the hash are always accessible via %{ $key }. my %newhash; for my $file (@h) { %newhash = %{ $file }; } Or, if you want to use the keys in the new hash: for my $file (@h) { my $key = $file->{key
